- The Confederation of Indonesian Workers Union (KSPI), as well as other trade unions and student groups, are slated to hold demonstrations across Indonesia to demand the revocation of the contentious omnibus law on job creation. - Per April 29 reports, two individuals were arrested in Almaty as police authorities reportedly extended summons to activists across Kazakhstan's various cities ahead of May Day rallies announced by opposition groups. The exact details of the protests were not known at the time of writing.

Assessments:

1. Apart from the protests mentioned above, workers' groups are liable to hold rallies to commemorate the occasion across other cities in the region. Based on precedent, the demonstrations may witness high turnouts in countries like Indonesia and the Philippines, however, ongoing COVID-19 restrictions prohibiting large gatherings in some cities could limit participation compared to previous years.
2. The protests also carry a potential for unrest. Authorities are liable to bolster security measures in the aforementioned locations to prevent such gatherings, especially in India as the country experiences a devastating wave of COVID-19 infections. In this light, there is a heightened risk of clashes between protesters and security forces, who are liable to forcefully disperse gatherings if they do not comply with COVID-19 measures. Travel disruptions to both pedestrian and vehicular traffic are anticipated in the vicinity of the demonstrations.

Recommendations:

Those operating or residing in the aforementioned locations on May 1 are advised to maintain vigilance due to anticipated demonstrations and the potential for unrest while allotting for disruptions to travel.
