Assessments & Forecast

1. Based on precedent and media estimates, the protests are likely to witness turnouts ranging from the high dozens to low thousands, with the protest in Madrid expected to witness the largest turnout.
2. Additionally, based on current estimates, judging by the growing momentum of pro-Palestinian activism among student groups, associated protests, including in the form of encampments and sit-ins, are likely to continue at the university and education institutions' campuses Europewide, despite the increasingly strict law enforcement measures. The scale of such encampments will vary from the low dozens to mid-hundreds on each campus. Ongoing encampments and planned protests on the campuses carry a credible likelihood of localized unrest in the form of clashes with police and pro-Palestinian protesters, as well as possible pro-Israel student protesters.
3. In addition to the aforementioned protests, the possibility of spontaneous pro-Palestinian and pro-Israel protests remains elevated regionwide. Such protests are likely to occur in central government buildings, Israeli and US diplomatic missions, Jewish and Muslim establishments, and prominent public places in major urban centers across Europe. Furthermore, the risk of disruptive protest actions and vandalism targeting establishments perceived as pro-Israel also remains elevated.
4. Given heightened sentiments surrounding the protest issue, any planned and spontaneous demonstrations carry an elevated potential for unrest. This is particularly true if the protests attract counterprotests by pro-Israel, pro-Palestinian, and/or far-right groups. Incidents of unrest are likely to manifest in the form of clashes between protesters and the police, as well as with counter-protesters, should such demonstrations manifest.
5. With that, authorities are likely to deploy a bolstered security presence near the protest locations to monitor proceedings. In the event of escalating unrest, police are liable to use forcible crowd dispersal methods, including arrests.

6. Disruptions to pedestrian and vehicular movement, including road closures and traffic diversions, should be anticipated near the protest locations. Further, given that protesters have used road blockades as a protest tactic in the past, the risk of the same remains. If this takes place, this will further increase the scale of disruptions

Recommendations

1. Those operating or residing in Europe on May 6-7 are advised to maintain heightened vigilance near protests related to the Israel-Hamas conflict due to the elevated potential for unrest.
2. Allot for travel-related disruptions in the vicinity of the protest locations.
